TOUR OUR HISTORY

As the Reconstruction Era began following the Civil War, the piney hills of North Central Louisiana that had been spared from wartime destruction was carved from surrounding parishes to form a new parish in 1873, and then named for President Abraham Lincoln. Word spread to Lincoln Parish that the Vicksburg, Shreveport and Pacific Railroad would soon run across North Louisiana, linking the Deep South with the Wild Wild West. For Robert E. Russ, Lincoln Parish's sheriff from 1877 to 1880, it was a dream come reality to have people live in the area. Russ donated 640 acres to the town; and by 1884, Ruston, short for Russ Town, was incorporated.

As the town took shape, new churches, businesses, civic organizations, and schools were established. In 1890, the Louisiana Chautauqua was chartered, laying the community's foundation in education. Louisiana Tech University was founded in 1894, and Grambling State University in 1901 becoming cornerstones upon which the area strongly stands to this day.

EXPLORE THE LINCOLN PARISH MUSEUM

Venture back and see the story of Ruston told through a collection of countless pictures and artifacts. On the National Register of Historic Places, the Lincoln Parish Museum, also known as the Kidd-Davis House, was donated in 1975 by Mary Olive Davis Green and Charlotte Davis Parrot. The house was constructed in 1886 for the Milton B. Kidd family and sold in 1921 to Robert Wesley Davis.

The museum's "Walls that Talk" exhibit includes seven murals showcasing vignettes from Lincoln Parish History, along with voice recordings of parish citizens telling the stories.

The museum displays a massive collection of arms and artifacts, unique to the area, chronicling United States conflicts from the Spanish-American War to Desert Storm and today's war on terror. It features an expansive weapons collection, as well as personal items such as diaries, Bibles and flight jackets.
